Continuation of 11, does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because:

Applicant's arguments filed 7/27/2007 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive.

Applicant argued that Wilding does not teach the claimed load balancing on received communication based on at least the working status. Neither O'Neil nor Wilding teach of the claimed load balancing based on a working status indication that the platform service is running, not running, or starting.

In response, Applicant is arguing against the references individually. One cannot show nonobviousness by attacking references individually where the rejections are based on combinations of references. See In re Keller, 642 F.2 d.13, 208 USPO 871 (CCPA 1981); In re Merck & Co., 800 F.2d 1091, 231 USPQ 375 (Fed. Cir. 1986). Furthermore, the claimed invention as a whole would have been obvious. O'Neil teaches of load belancing on received communication based on at least a working status indication of the platform service (co. 6, lines 27-36; col. 7, lines 24-31). O'Neil does not specifically teach that the working status indication is running, or trunning, or starting. However, Wilding teaches of a working status that indicates whether a service is running or not running (Paragraphs 0035-0059). It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to perform load balancing on received communication based on at least a working status indication of the platform service and to be based on various working status that are known in the art including running or not running as taught by Wilding. Furthermore, load balancing is performed to enable requests to be processed by one or more servers and to prevent rejecting or "unprocessing" of requests. Thus, it would been beneficial to determine whether the platform service is operating or not operating to allow corrective actions including enablings requests to be processed by other servers.
